Dear SAMHSA:

I am a paruretic, which means I suffer from shy bladder.

Shy bladder is a real medical disorder, and those suffering from it deserve better regulations than those presently used, which involve urine-only testing procedures.

I object to the rules that equate inability to produce a specimen with refusal to test. These rules are unjust.

SAMHSA needs to mandate the use of alternative tests -- oral fluid, hair; sweat patches, etc., -- for anyone who requests these, but especially for those who claim to suffer from shy bladder.

Present rules are improperly and, perhaps illegally -- through discrimination -- hurting some people's ability to obtain and keep employment.

Thank you.
